

A Study on the Effect of Electronic Moxibustion Based on Ziwu Liuzhu in Treating Constipation in Stroke Patients

NCT07372326

Status	RECRUITING
Phase	Not Applicable
Sponsor	The Fourth Affiliated Hospital of Zhejiang University School of Medicine
Enrollment	105 participants

Key Eligibility Criteria

Inclusion (4)

- Meets the diagnostic criteria of both Western medicine and traditional Chinese medicine, and has not undergone surgery or other internal medical treatments, with the occurrence of constipation;
- The condition is stable, without severe clinical complications;
- Can accept moxibustion treatment, and the local skin is undamaged;
- Those who agree to participate in this study and sign the informed consent form.

Exclusion (8)

- Digestive tract disorders, such as intestinal polyps, tuberculosis, and tumors. Irritable bowel syndrome or constipation secondary to organic diseases (such as endocrine, metabolic or post-operative diseases); abdominal aneurysm, hepatosplenomegaly, or severe cardiovascular, liver, kidney or mental disorders and coagulation disorders.
- The patient had constipation before the stroke.
- The patient withdrew from the study due to other reasons during the course of the study.
- Dropout criteria and termination criteria:
- Patients who have not received the prescribed treatment and whose therapeutic effect cannot be determined;
- ... and 3 more (see full listing online)

Locations (1 total)

4th Affiliated Hospital, School of Medicine, Zhejiang University, Jinhua, Zhejiang, China